Senior Software Engineer | SalesDraft

Dear Hiring Manager,

SalesDraft is minutes from where I live in Pleasant Grove, and the startup pattern here is one I already know well. I joined Spiff as an early engineer, built its platform infrastructure from scratch, and stayed through an acquisition by Salesforce. I would like to do that again, closer to home this time.

Why I think SalesDraft is awesome!

I have spent years building software for sales teams specifically: commission software at Spiff, and sales-acceleration tooling at XANT, formerly InsideSales.com. Recruiting for sales talent is a problem space I already understand from the inside. Applying AI to fix an outdated, manual process is also exactly the kind of work I already do on my own time. My Food Cards project uses the Anthropic Claude API with real prompt engineering, not just an API call bolted onto a form.

Why you should think I am awesome!

I have 14 years in React and TypeScript, with real production experience in Node.js and Express: an admin portal at Overstock, and extending backend services at Salesforce. I use Claude Code and Cursor AI every day in production work, so building AI tooling into how a team ships is already my default, not something I would need to adopt. I also have the ownership pattern this role is asking for. I architected internationalization infrastructure from scratch at Spiff. I drove company-wide TypeScript adoption at Salesforce. Both were initiatives I led start to finish.

Why we would be awesome together!

Being minutes from Lindon means no commute friction and no relocation question. I can start being useful on day one. I also like the stakes of a seed-stage team. The upside is real, but so is the standard to hit, and that matches how I already like to work.

Sincerely,

Travis Hoki
